Generation Now

Thanks to the generosity of the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, CTC will partner with Penumbra (Saint Paul, MN), Ma-Yi Theater Company (New York City, NY), Latino Theater Company (Los Angeles, CA), and Native Voices at the Autry (Los Angeles, CA) to develop 16 new plays for multigenerational audiences by writers who are Black, Indigenous, Latinx, and Asian American Pacific Islander.

This partnership is expected to bring a richer cultural context to the canon of work for multigenerational theatre and to collectively amplify each communities’ voices. Generation Now is guided by a deep respect and advocacy for the intelligence and agency of younger audiences.

About the Partners

DeLanna Studi, Native Voices at the Autry Artistic Director: “From its inception, Native Voices has been dedicated to supporting Indigenous playwrights and theatre artists and sharing Native stories with audiences of all ages. We are excited to collaborate with these incredible cohort theatres on Generation Now to reach across generations and geography, bringing multigenerational, diverse audiences together to appreciate the universal human experience and collectively shape an inclusive, shared future.”

Sarah Bellamy, Penumbra President: “Not only is Penumbra excited to work with such esteemed partners, but really hopeful about the collaborative model that we are developing together. For the field to change, the canon must be diversified and young people in particular need to see themselves lovingly and authentically represented onstage. When we imagine the impact of this project, the possibilities are myriad and so vitalizing.”

Ralph B. Peña, Ma-Yi Theater Company Artistic Director: “This is an amazing gift from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. An opportunity to work with Children’s Theatre Company to develop new works for multigenerational audiences is a long-held dream for Ma-Yi Theater, made even sweeter by a cohort of culturally specific theaters we have long admired.”

Peter C. Brosius, CTC Artistic Director: “Children’s Theatre Company is grounded in the deep respect we have for our audiences, our partner theatres, and the desire to create powerful new work. We look forward to continuing to learn from each other with Generation Now. We know that our distinctive work and practices will profoundly inform and inspire us as we move these plays from conception, through commission and development, and into production for our audiences.”

José Luis Valenzuela, Latino Theater Company Artistic Director: “This collaboration gives the Latino Theater Company the opportunity to advance our mission and to engage in a national dialogue with culturally specific theater companies in the development and creation of new works for the American theater canon for young and culturally specific audiences.”
Welcome to the world premiere of Something Happened in Our Town. As this program was going to print, our community was stunned by another killing of a Black man by a police officer. This time, his name was Amir Locke. Our hearts and deepest sympathies go out to his parents and family as they grieve their loss.

Over the past two years, our community has confronted our challenges and shortcomings with real, substantive dialogue about how to be more just, inclusive, and equitable. We are a community that collaborates, works and talks together, and values the ability to face problems and find common ground.

Minneapolis has been the center of a national reckoning on race that has been needed for centuries. We were rocked by the killing of George Floyd in May 2020 and the uprising that followed. It shined an even brighter light on the inequities in our state, such as the terrible disparity in educational outcomes between White students and Black and Brown students that place us at the very bottom of rankings in the U.S.A. We have also seen systemic disparities and racism in employment, home ownership, business opportunities, and more.

Over the last few years, we and other parents have struggled with how to talk to our kids about race, racism, and systems of oppression. The book Something Happened in Our Town was written by a biracial team of child psychologists, Marianne Celano, Marietta Collins, and Ann Hazzard to help parents and caregivers talk about racism and violence in our communities. When this book was brought to our attention, we knew instantly that we needed to bring this story to our stage. We were thrilled that the authors were willing to let us adapt it into a play.

This project called for an amazing playwright to deepen and expand the story to make a play that would help us understand each other, foster healing, and create space for real conversations. Cheryl L. West has brought her deep insights into human behavior, her generosity of spirit, and her rich sense of humor to show how we truly need to see inside each other’s lives and hearts.

Our journey to create this work has been enhanced by the generosity of the book authors in sharing their experience working with communities, leading conversations, and encouraging dialogue. It has also been strengthened by our partnership with WCCO, who has worked with us to help families discuss these issues and create space for learning and growth.

Now we are excited for you to witness these two families on our stage as they make sense of the world and find ways to come together. Thank you for being here. Enjoy the show.

Countering Racism and Racial Injustice with Children

From the authors of Something Happened in Our Town, Marianne Celano, Ph.D., ABPP; Marietta Collins, Ph.D.; Ann Hazzard, Ph.D., ABPP

It is understandable that adults want to protect children from life’s harsher realities to help them feel safe. Therefore, many parents or teachers may not have discussed racial bias or police shootings with young children.

Research has shown that children even as young as three years of age notice and comment on differences in skin color. Humans of all ages tend to ascribe positive qualities to the group that they belong to and negative qualities to other groups. Despite some parents’ attempts to protect their children from frightening media content, children often become aware of incidents of community violence, including police shootings. Parents who don’t proactively talk about racial issues with their children are inadvertently teaching their children that race is a taboo topic. Parents who want to raise children to accept individuals from diverse cultures need to counter negative attitudes that their children develop from exposure to the negative racial stereotypes that persist in our society.

It is important to address racial bias with children. Take the time to address your child’s questions or comments. Do not ignore or sidestep them with blanket reassurances (e.g., “We are all the same inside”). If your child makes a negative racial comment, ask them in a nonjudgmental tone, “what makes you say that?” Your child’s answer may provide an opportunity to counter generalizations or to increase empathy. Encourage multidimensional views of others. Preschoolers tend to view people as all good or all bad. You can help your child to recognize human complexity and learn to consider both similarities and differences between people in appearance, feelings, preferences, and behaviors. Balance your acknowledgement of the reality of racism with messages about hope for change and the availability of help. Be prepared to talk about what your child sees and hears. He or she may need help in understanding community events or news stories. It may be difficult to limit your child’s exposure to graphic images or overly detailed information about community violence, but try to do so to avoid inducing undue anxiety.

Parents can also demonstrate behaviors that promote children’s positive attitudes towards racial and cultural diversity. Make a proactive effort to regularly engage in activities with individuals from many cultures. Ensure diversity in the media, toys, books, and art that are part of your child’s life at home and school. Make a rule that it’s not acceptable to tease or reject someone based on identity. If teasing occurs, try to find out what underlies the behavior. If the conflict is really about another issue, help your child recognize and resolve that issue. If the underlying reason is discomfort with differences, plan activities to try to overcome that discomfort. Demonstrate and encourage acts of kindness toward others and activities to challenge injustice (e.g. protest marches or vigils).

Parents of Black children often face unique challenges in addressing racial bias with their children. Unfortunately, children of color are likely to experience racist encounters. Parents should strive to promote a positive racial identity in your child by having ongoing conversations and reading books about contributions of Black Americans to science and culture, and by participating in community and family activities that contribute to a positive sense of self embedded within a Black American community; prepare your child for racist encounters, beginning in preschool. If children feel safe, they can express their disagreement in an assertive but non-aggressive manner with peers who have made racist comments; and encourage your child to inform you or trusted adults (e.g. teachers) about racist behaviors from others. Your child’s disclosures will give you an opportunity to discuss how to maintain positive self esteem and respond appropriately to these challenging situations.

Timothy Douglas, Director

"'Dare to speak the unspeakable' was an early and deeply impactful bit of instruction to me for navigating this artist's journey. Kudos to Children's Theatre Company for choosing to reveal daring, thoughtful, empathetic, and uncomfortable truths with its programming of Something Happened in Our Town. The book, from which Cheryl L. West's extraordinary adaptation is sourced, gives voice to one of this nation's most pressing cultural, social, and racial reckonings, and as revealed through the perspectives of young Emma and Josh, this contemporary tale is also a creative and humanistic invitation for each of our communities to unite—not only to speak the unspeakable, but more importantly to experience a collective breath, atone together in this moment, and forge a path toward a mutually tolerant and progressive future."

Cheryl L. West, Playwright

"In a time of reckoning in our country, this work is a call to action, to facilitate the much-needed discussion about inclusion, compassion, and what it really means to be peace makers in our homes, schools, and communities. Hopefully, this story will move us one step closer to healing our racial divide."

Something Happened in Our Town co-authors Marianne Celano, Ph.D., ABPP; Marietta Collins, Ph.D.; and Ann Hazzard, Ph.D., ABPP

"We are thrilled to have our work go from page to stage. This book has helped so many families and communities discuss racial justice. The play delivers the same important message, but in a wholly creative new way."

Expression Signs

One of the ways people express beliefs is through signs that can be displayed in yards, windows, or at protests. Create a sign to showcase a cause you believe in.

What would you do?

Write a letter giving Emma or Josh advice on how to handle the recent events they experienced. Would you have handled it differently?

"I Am an Activist" Poem

Use the prompts to create your own "I Am an Activist" poem (other family members should, too!). Read your poem aloud to your family and listen to each other's poems. What is similar or different?

For one example, here's an "I Am an Activist" poem created by Brodrick Santeze Ryans:

"I Am an Activist"

I am SEEN
I feel HEARD
I love KNOWLEDGE
I need JOY
I want PEACE
I fear INJUSTICE
I dream IN COLOR
I think POSITIVE
I am an Activist

One gets more than is needed, while the other gets less than is needed. Thus, a huge disparity is created.

The assumption is that everyone benefits from the same supports. This is considered to be equal treatment.

Everyone gets the support they need, which produces equity.

All 3 can see the game without supports or accommodations because the cause(s) of the inequity was addressed. The systemic barrier has been removed.
